

Your little ego

For big egos, only individual happiness counts. On the one hand, quite practical, because you only have to take yourself into account. Chances are you don't have a big ego. With a Smaller ego there is room to think of others as well. That makes your life more complicated, but also more valuable.

Put talent on the center spot (+) and map out your own unique value.

1. Personal: Where are you from; your DNA? What traits have you inherited from your family? Do you use that or do you choose your own path? What do you do in your spare time?
2. Social: What topics interest you? What knowledge have you gained? By whom? Who do you admire? Who or what do you follow on social media?
3. Business: What do you like to do? What work experience do you have? What did you learn from it? Who or what inspires you in your work?

Your talent is a combination of these aspects and forms the 20 % with which you make the difference: your little ME. Doubt, frustration and irritation are part of this learning path. It is very healthy and a sign that something is being touched. It is also a signal that it is time for new developments or steps forward. Often this is accompanied by letting go of things that do not generate energy. Letting go does not mean burdening someone else with a problem or starting over. You build on your 20 % and make use of your network.

Fun fact: networking is about sharing and maintaining relationships
